Program's Making A Difference

The World Health Organisation defines mental health as "a state of wellbeing in which every individual realises his or her own potential, can cope with the normal stresses of life, can work productively and fruitfully, and can contribute to her or his community." Over the years, society has become more aware of the issues relating to mental health and is more willing to discuss and accept it.

It is hard to believe that after WW1, WWII and the Vietnam War, Defence members would return home from combat and were expected to simply fit back into society after experiencing horrendous and life changing experiences. The terms Railway Spine, nostalgia, irritable heart, disordered action of the heart and shell shock are all names referring to what we call today, Post-Traumatic Stress Disorder.

From my own experience, the procedures and process in which Defence manages mental health in the field have changed dramatically. The 18 month period between my first and second deployment to the Middle East Area of Operation saw more robust and thorough screening during the pre, post and follow up health screenings conducted by Defence Health.

One Defence program that has had outstanding results in dealing with mental health is the ADF Arts for Recovery, Resilience, Teamwork and Skills Program (ARRTS). ARRTS is an arts-based program to assist permanent ADF and Reserve personnel facing health and well-being challenges or seeking to 're-set' themselves by rebuilding their confidence and resilience. The program also benefits those members who will shortly transition to civilian life.

ARRTS is a supportive, non-rank, military uniform-free learning environment. No previous experience or training in the arts is required as training and mentoring is provided by civilian and defence arts experts.

The four-week residential Canberra-based program comprises three artistic streams: visual arts; music and rhythm; and creative writing. The program is held at Canberra University's Inspire Centre.

The program assists personnel to address wellbeing issues and individual recovery. Injuries or illnesses do not need to be service related or as the result of operational deployment. The acquisition of new skills in a positive learning environment encourages improved self-esteem, initiative, and teamwork. Exposure to new experiences, sharing stories, fears, and concerns with like-minded peers, assists individuals to reconnect with families, the community, and the workforce. Previous participants have reported significantly improved wellbeing including increased self-confidence with an enhanced ability to 'move on' in their lives as a result of participating in the program.

At the end of the program, the music, rhythm and creating writing participants put on a concert as well as the visual arts participants displaying their art and photography work. The concert involves, acting, short skits, comedy and music.

NEWS.....

There are a lot of moving parts involved in the ramp-up of the government's naval shipbuilding enterprise. It's hard for anybody to keep track of them all, particularly as new pieces of information are sporadically disclosed in a range of forums and sources.

The last thing Australian Defence Force personnel, their families and our veterans need right now is your judgement. They need our support. In the wake of the release of the Inspector-General of the Australian Defence Force Inquiry into Afghanistan, there has been plenty of media commentary quick to judge our servicemen and women.

The submarine game in East Asia is heating up, with multiple new submarines being constructed. Japan recently launched the first of the new Taigei-class. ## Our November Navy Hero – LCDR Leon Verdi Goldsworthy GC DSC GM RANVR

Leonard Verdi Goldsworthy (1909–1994), naval officer and factory manager, was born on 19 January 1909 at Broken Hill, New South Wales, second son of South Australian-born parents Alfred Thomas Goldsworthy, miner, and his wife Eva Jane, née Riggs.

Soon after the outbreak of World War II Goldsworthy applied to join the Royal Australian Navy (RAN) but was rejected for failing to meet the required physical standards. His records show he was 5ft 5ins and he was missing the small toes on his left and right feet. Undeterred, he reapplied through the Yachtsmen Scheme, and was appointed as a probationary sub-lieutenant, Royal Australian Naval Volunteer Reserve, on 24 March 1941.

Perhaps the most famous and certainly the most highly decorated group of Yachtsmen Scheme volunteers and other members of the RAN were those brave men engaged in what was known as 'Rendering Mines Safe' or RMS. The British government had decided that rendering mines safe did not fall within the ambit of the criterion 'in the face of the enemy', although when crouched over a German firing mechanism which was designed to blow one to pieces on a dark, cold night in the middle of a destroyed city, it must have seemed so to the practitioners. The outcome was that RMS officers could only qualify for 'civilian' awards, the highest of which was the George Cross - the Victoria cross equivalent. Some measure of the collective achievements of this group of Australian officers to the war effort is their collective total of four George Crosses (GC) and ten George Medals (GM), with many other awards for gallantry.

For a man initially rejected as being physically unfit for the Navy, Leon Goldsworthy finished the war as the Australia's most highly decorated naval officer of World War II, the acknowledged underwater mine disposal expert in Europe, the conqueror of over one hundred weapons in European waters and about thirty in the Pacific. His full story can be found on our website: https://navvvic.net/heroes/goldsworthy.html

for Operation Bursa

Award of ASM for Operation Bursa

Operation Bursa was the counter-terrorist operation which commenced in 1980 to defend the Bass Straight oil and gas platforms against potential terrorist attack.

Navy provided air support to Special

Forces (SF) operations from the commencement of Op Bursa, until the task was handed over to Army Aviation in 1990. While eligible Army personnel were granted the ASM for Op Bursa, recognition of the contribution of Fleet Air Arm personnel was denied. This situation has now been rectified.

Go to the Fleet Air Arm Association website for background information, advice on eligibility of FAA veterans and the process of applying for the award.
